When my grandmother, Zelda, passed away a few years ago at the age of 90, she left me with a box of miscellaneous items from her house that she knew I had grown to appreciate over the years. Among them were a few old letters from her, a small photo of her and her husband, and a few other items that she had saved over the years. I was struck by how much she had lived and how much she had loved. I was struck by how much she had taught me and how much she had loved me. I was struck by how much she had lived and how much she had loved me. I was struck by how much she had lived and how much she had loved me.

You are not who you used to be, and that's okay.

You've been hurt, you've gone through numerous ups and downs that have made you who you are today. Over the years, so many things have happened—things that have changed your perspective, taught you lessons, and forced your spirit to grow. As time passes, nobody stays the same, but some people will still tell you that you have changed. Respond to them by saying, "Of course I've changed. That's what life is all about. But I'm still the same person, just a little stronger now than I ever was before."

- Everything that happens helps you grow, even if it's hard to see right now.

Circumstances will direct you, correct you, and perfect you over time. So whatever you do,
