Giving birth in a culture that continually depicts labor as painful and dangerous is a feat in itself these days. Everywhere we look, we’re shown images of women screaming while giving birth, and masked doctors heroically saving the day. TV medical dramas abound with women being rushed into operating rooms for emergency C-sections, and sitcoms are notorious for showing laboring women bitching at their guilt-ridden husbands for making them endure the “trials of labor.” Rarely is birth depicted as a pleasurable experience. No wonder most women fear it.

Some women, in fact, are so afraid of birth that they literally can’t conceive. I spoke with a doctor recently who told me that she was infertile. “My husband and I have had numerous tests and there is absolutely nothing wrong with us physically,” she said, “but I’ve always been terrified of giving birth. I’ve known since I was a child that I was never going to give birth. Do you think my fear has actually kept me from conceiving?”

I’ve spoken with other women who have been able to conceive but unable to give birth vaginally. They, too, have wondered what role fear played in their experiences.
Childbirth. She lives with her daughter, Joy, and dog, Molly, in Boulder, Colorado, where she is a writer, speaker, birth consultant and author of the book, Unassisted. Laura Shanley maintains the website unassistedchildbirth.com. Laura also writes periodically about the joys of unassisted childbirth on her blog, laurashanley.blogspot.com.

About the Author:

There is no doubt that the energy of birth is powerful. But its power can be like the wind that scatters the seeds of the willow tree, or a sunrise that bathes the sky in a beautiful yellow light. This is my vision of birth. Someday, I know the rest of the world will share it with me.

Having faith is the first step toward eliminating the cycle of fear, tension and pain that most women experience in labor. Faith leads to relaxation, and relaxation leads to pleasure. And yet, eliminating fear is not impossible, for there is something much more powerful than the distribution of anxiety.

Sometimes that's easier said than done. Fear runs deep in our culture, and many of us could spend a lifetime (or two) purging ourselves of the fear we've developed. Even the most fearless parents still has to live in a culture that is constantly emphasizing the "dangers" of being alive. I'm reminded of a statement made by Eric Sevareid. "The biggest big business in America," he said, "is not steel, automobiles or television. It is the manufacture, refinement and distribution of anxiety."