

The Pitfalls of Going with the Flow in Birth

Written by Melissa Bruijn, B.A. (UQ) & Debby Gould, B.Nursing (QUT) GradDipMidwif (ACU)
Sunday, 01 December 2013 00:00 - Last Updated Wednesday, 18 March 2015 10:18

Oh, replies Kelly casually, I'd really like a natural birth, and I don't really want any drugs but I'm just going to go with the flow and see what happens.

One and a half weeks later, Kelly is lying on an operating table, after an induction, some pethidine, an epidural and 28 hours of labor. She is exhausted, frightened, concerned for her baby, and in shock at the happenings of the last day and night. And now she is meeting Ned for her

The Pitfalls of Going with the Flow in Birth

The Pitfalls of Going with the Flow in Birth

The Pitfalls of Going with the Flow in Birth

Written by Melissa Bruijn, B.A. (UQ) & Debby Gould, B.Nursing (QUT) GradDipMidwif (ACU)

The Pitfalls of Going with the Flow in Birth