ambush. Sides had clearly been chosen. The principal, guidance counselor, and son's teacher sat in a cluster together along one side of the table. Feeling oddly hollow, I pulled out a chair and sat down. Since I lead conflict resolution workshops in my working life, I was confident that we could talk over our issues and come to an understanding. I was wrong.

The counselor read aloud from a list of ADHD behavioral symptoms son's teacher had been tracking over the past few weeks. My little boy's major transgressions were messy
